Text: Miller R W, Hauer R J, Werner L P. 2015. Urban Forestry - Planning and Managing Urban Greenspaces 3rd Ed.

As a relatively young disciplinary focus within the realm of forest management, urban forestry is a term of varied definition reflecting professional training history as much as evolving organization and insight by practitioners, policy-makers and academics alike. Generally focused on the management of vegetated spaces in highly developed and populated areas, the term can focus to specific pairing of trees on local city streets or expand to regional forest management planning for the protection of water resources to supply urban populations. It can be said that forestry is the discipline and urban is a context for management planning. This context involves the structures, people and design conventions within the developed landscape which can act independently or in concert for the betterment or decline of the environment in immediate contact with people occupying urban spaces. This course seeks to provide an introduction and overview of Urban Forestry as it plays out in New Jersey, in the United States and internationally.

The goals of this course are to:

1. Provide an introduction to definitions, topics and professions in urban forestry
2. Provide a working understanding of how the discipline and practice of urban forestry is organized within NJ and nationally
3. Develop an understanding of managing trees and other urban vegetation as a plant community, while being called upon to manage public trees on an individual tree level
4. Introduce students to industry Standards and Best Management Practices, their assumptions and alternatives when assumptions are proven unreliable
5. Develop an understanding of the structures and components within an urban or community forest management plan
6. Develop an understanding of the linkage between species and site for management and performance expectations and planning for provision of environmental services to urban populations
7. Gain a functional understanding and practical exposure to common analysis tools used in industry

Academic Integrity at Rutgers

Principles of academic integrity require that every Rutgers University student:

- properly acknowledge and cite all use of the ideas, results, or words of others
- properly acknowledge all contributors to a given piece of work
- make sure that all work submitted as his or her own in a course or other academic activity is produced without the aid of unsanctioned materials or unsanctioned collaboration
- obtain all data or results by ethical means and report them accurately without suppressing any results inconsistent with his or her interpretation or conclusions
- treat all other students in an ethical manner, respecting their integrity and right to pursue their educational goals without interference. This requires that a student neither facilitate academic dishonesty by others nor obstruct their academic progress
- uphold the canons of the ethical or professional code of the profession for which he or she is preparing.

Adherence to these principles is necessary in order to insure that:

- everyone is given proper credit for his or her ideas, words, results, and other scholarly accomplishments
- all student work is fairly evaluated and no student has an inappropriate advantage over others
- the academic and ethical development of all students is fostered
- the reputation of the University for integrity in its teaching, research, and scholarship is maintained and enhanced.

Failure to uphold these principles of academic integrity threatens both the reputation of the University and the value of the degrees awarded to its students. Every member of the University community therefore bears a responsibility for ensuring that the highest standards of academic integrity are upheld.

– The Rutgers University Academic Integrity Policy

University life can be very stressful. In fact, there have been estimates that over 70% of students have at least one event which would suggest the benefit of counseling during their undergraduate career. You have already paid for access to help in student fees, so please use the tools that you have at your disposal to ensure your best opportunity for a sound education.
